Subject: Re: Ames Warehouse Fire EPA website blurb; school results stuff

The school data that I saw only included indoor air readings from the CTEH site.

On another note, EPA's DATARAMs data in spreadsheet does not look like it includes anything for schools. From final tab maybe your school results were just pDRs and thus summary not provided to you yet?

I understand CTEH checked schools with handhelds. It doesn't look like data for the schools is publicly online on WVDEP website? Or maybe it is but they only have non PM readings listed anyway and location info is not spelled out (just lat longs) after 10/22. If the public is looking for reassurance that the air quality at the nearby schools is ok, I am not sure where they would find that as of now. So sharing info from EPA's monitors will be helpful.

I logged on the CTEH private website and don't see the past school data spelled out - I know Rich found it before so I must just be missing it. There are CTEH PM2.5 community data from today before they demobilized, and on a positive note their max result was 9 ug/m3 and average of detects was 7 ug/m3, which is great.

Just FYI, the local health department has 2 radio segments from doctors at the Camden Clark Parkersburg medical clinic on their website on the fire and pulmonary health which I thought was really great:

Hi guys

Sorry for delay. Multiple technical difficulties over here, can't get EPA webmail to work at all.

Some very minor tweaks on your proposed blurb - note I corrected name of WV local health, which is Mid-Ohio Valley Health Dept not Wood County confusingly - and added we are also coordinating with Ohio state health. ATSDR ER also working on a more detailed followup email for you that we need to clear further with our HQ and state/local health. Might have our followup email ready by tomorrow at some point, will certainly try to keep pushing on it, which you or local health could use to add to website info as you see fit.
